The Argonian Empire teeters on the brink of civil war by treacherous royal blood with an assassination attempt on the queen. Earth is the target of their salvation if Princess Navia can transfer the queen's essence into a unique human. On Earth, Richard Octavian is a superhuman and immortal living in the shadows of society as a university student. He's a shape shifter, but his strongest power is his experience coupled with flight and super senses. He is thrown into leading a newly formed superhero group called, 'The Eternal Champions' altering the battlefield making Earth the center for galactic peace. His superhero group is sanctioned by the government, but more importantly Richard decides his future as a crime fighter. Their first challenge starts with rescuing dignitaries marooned inside a prison complex. A telekinetic superhuman runs the complex and amasses an army to get the survivors before sunrise. Complex San Francisco is the rehab prison setting where the group plays cat and mouse trying to find the survivors before they become hostages and bargaining chips for a prison break. Elizabeth and Susan become additions to the group with a presidential pardon for preventing a catastrophic war with South America and Japan. The women become accustomed to the three superheroes - Richard, John, and Larcis; but John takes things too lightly as he attempts to wake Susan up from a nightmare and almost dies from her mental reflexive attack. Susan and John's romantic first encounter blossoms into a cruise ship vacation but the Argonians abduct them out at sea. Richard once again speeds to the rescue, and in confronting Princess Navia, he is left with the decision to kill her or trust her to save Susan from certain death if the Queen's essence is not transferred properly or in time. This superhero epic storyline follows Creator and the Eternal Champions into a web of success, failures, romance and danger in battling machines, superhuman villains, Soldiers, hordes of criminals, and aliens.
